all mankind might want to become dentists.

First the lion was thrown with a noose passed into his cage at the end of a stick, doped with a hypodermic shot of some six or seven indicated horse-power intensity, and rolled on his back, with his four feet elevated, and tied to cage bars. Thereafter a second noose was slipped about his reck and a strong, rubber covered balling iron wedged between his jaws. Then his head was tied down and the ailing teeth treated with novocaine, and Dr. Gillespie went to work.

Ultimately when Captain Jack's two hopeless teeth were completely out and his three merely affected teeth were properly drilled and stopped, his lashings were untied and he was transferred back to the cage where he spends the bulk of his time roaring and thinking. He seemed to show no resentment in any direction, and after a brief constitutional around the cage lay down and went to sleep.
